tries appear between December 31st, 1907 and December 31st, 1908, but on the last named date a line is drawn under the entries above and balance entered at $8,008.50.

What is true of the account with the city treasurer and the account of marshal's deeds, applies as well to the four banks carrying the city deposits. There is not a single entry of deposit made with, or a check drawn on either the American National bank, the Lowry National, the Fourth National, or the Atlanta National bank; the only entries appearing in the general ledger on accounts of these banks being the balances reported from year to year by the city comptroller.

The accounts representing real estate and other assets of the city are run pretty much the same way. Take for instance the account for "water works." This appears on the ledger at an even $4,000,000 on December 31st, 1905, December 31st, 1906, and December 31st, 1907, while on December 31st, 1908, the balance changed to $4,008,000. The amounts spent since December 31st, 1906, in the enlargement and extension of the water works system are not charged to this property account.

While we have made no pretense of auditing the accounts, or any part of the accounts, and have simply looked into the system of accounting in use, it is necessary for us to give you a few figures from the books to clearly illustrate some of the weak features of the system. Take as an example the "sanitary department." On the statement of the city's assets and liabilities as at January 1st, 1908, appearing on pages 41 and 42 of the comptroller's report, you will find under head of assets the following: "Sanitary department, 100 acres and buildings, $100,000, other property, $38." Whether these figures were taken from the general ledger in the comptroller's office, or whether the report was first made up and then the figures entered on the ledger account, we were unable to determine but the land used by the sanitary department appears on the ledger at the same figure, $100,000, on December 31st, 1906, 1907 and 1908 respectively. On the same dates "other property," which on inquiry we were informed included livestock, wagons and other equipment, is entered, $33,678. In the cursory examination we made of the books we did not notice that any additional real estate had been purchased for this department during the last three years, but the inventory of "other property," including live stock and implements, appears on the books on December 31st, 1906, at $33,678. Quite a considerable amount was spent in that department for livestock and other equipment during the year 1907, but on December 31st, 1907, this property is inventoried at exactly the same figure. During the year 1908 we noticed among other disbursements in this department that $2,124 was paid for a flushing machine, and that $6,738.50 was paid for additional mules, this being the amount actually paid out after allowances by the dealers for mules given in part exchange. Notwithstanding there was at least $8,862.50 spent in this department for additional equipment, there is absolutely no change in the account, neither a debit or a credit to it during the entire year, and on December 31st, 1908, the property in hand is valued at exactly the same figure, $33,678.

Prominent Atlantian Died Monday Afternoon After Lingerin Illness—Funeral Services Tuesday Afternoon at Residence.

Judge W. H. Hulsey, who died Monday afternoon.

Judge William H. Hulsey, one of the builders of Atlanta, died Monday afternoon at 10 minutes after 4 o'clock at St. Joseph's Infirmary. His health had been declining for some months past and a few weeks ago his condition grew critical. Funeral services will be conducted at his home, 74 Forrest avenue, at 3 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, by Rev. W. F. Glenn. The interment will be in Oakland.

The following named gentlemen will act as pallbearers, and meet at the office of H. M. Patterson & Co., at 2 p. m., General A. J. West, Colonel L. P. Thomas, Captain A. J. Summers, Professor Otto Spahr, Mr. Anthony Murphy, Mr. John L. Tye, Judge George Hulley, Judge W. T. Newman, Dr. W. M. Durham.

SKETCH OF HIS LIFE.

Judge Hulsey is survived by four sons and two daughters: Messrs. Eli B. of Tupelo, Miss; William E. of Birmingham, Ala.; Fred W. of Atlanta; Luther J. of Atlanta; Mrs. Andrew J. Collier, of Atlanta, and Miss Eulalie Hulsey, of Atlanta.

Even from boyhood his career has been one of marked distinction and closely linked with Atlanta's brightest and most progressive interests. He was born in 1838 in Dekalb county, the son of Mr. Eli J. Hulsey and Mrs. Charlotte Collier Hulsey. When he was 12 years old he came to Atlanta, where he received his scholastic education. This completed, he studied law in the offices of Ezzard and Collier and when barely out of his teens was admitted to the bar.

In April, 1861 he entered the service of the Confederate army and was made a

Charles L. Elyea Declares He Was Absolutely Astounded At the Interest Being Taken in the Big Event—What the Manufacturers, Business Men and Farmers Are Saying.

A 10-days' trip to New York and other important centers in that busy corner of the continent has convinced Charles L. Elyea, president of the Elyea-Austell company, Pryor street and Edgewood avenue, that the most absorbing idea in the big eastern cities today is the great highway that is to be built from Atlanta to New York in connection with the automobile reliability contest under the direction of The Journal and the New York Herald.

"I was simply amazed," said Mr. Elyea Thursday morning shortly after his return, "to find how intensely interested everybody up there is in the contest and the national automobile show that is to follow it. I confess that before my trip I had been viewing the enterprise from a more or less local point of view. But before I had been in New York 12 hours, I realized that it was national in its scope. That awakened me to the full importance of what it is going to mean to Georgia, Atlanta and the whole south."

Mr. Elyea is a naturally conservative business man. Hence the significance of his enthusiasm.

"You can't keep from getting enthusiastic," he said, "if you spend a day in the east. You don't have to ask people up there about the road from The Journal office to The Herald office across a thousand miles of country, or about the automobile show. They'll tackle you on the subject the moment they learn you are from Atlanta. This is true of the public at large as well as of automobile dealers. There is no shadow of a doubt that the highway is going to be kept hot with machines speeding from New York to Atlanta and from cities all along the route."

Mr. Elyea is a dealer in automobile supplies, motorcycles and such things. That furnished the business basis for his trip and put him into immediate touch with the large manufacturers in New York, Connecticut, Massachusetts and adjacent states.

MEANS BIG THINGS FOR GEORGIA.

"In New York," he said, "I went into the establishment of the United Manufacturers, a concern representing a number of the leading manufacturers of glass franks, greases, spark plugs, speedometers and other automobile appliances. The manager shook my hand over again when he learned where I was from. Then he lighted out talking about the road to and automobile reliability contest and the big automobile show. He said that the manufacturers and the people at large considered both projects the most important undertaking that had ever been advanced in the south and New York. He told me that henceforth Georgia would take a larger place in American life, and that Atlanta would inevitably become one of the greatest distributing centers in the union."

"At Bristol, Conn., I saw the manager of the New Departure Manufacturing company. These people are making a new $5,000 car which they hope to have made the pilot car of the test run from New York to Atlanta next fall. They are into the contest heart and soul and will have a big display at the show."

The Corbin Screw corporation at New Britain, Conn. manufacturers of the Corbin car, say they will be largely represented in the show and are expecting great things from the good roads and reliability contest inaugurated by The Journal and the New York Herald.

At Hartford, Conn., continued by Elyea, I met personally Messrs. Pope, Walker and Cox of the Pope Manufacturing company. They all three said they would make displays at the Atlanta automobile show just as extensive as any they made in New York and that they considered the Atlanta to New York highway one of the most significant movements in the country's history."

EVERYBODY INTERESTED.

The Hendee Manufacturing company at Springfield, Mass., makers of the Indian motorcycle, of whom we are representatives here, were among the most enthusiastic people I talked with. They told me that people from that entire section, farmers and business men as well as automobilists, are tremendously interested in the Journal-Herald contest. They will have one of the most notable exhibits at the automobile show.

And so it was everywhere I went," said Mr. Elyea. "At Boston I saw the manager of the Royal Tourist company. He, too, was enthusiastic over the contest and the show. He declared that Atlanta and Georgia had done what most of the biggest cities in the union would have considered an impossible feat and that they deserved the congratulations of the whole United States. All of the people I have mentioned are representative of the largest manufacturing interests in the country and reflect the opinion of thousands and thousands of minds."

Immediately after the war he was elected by large plurality vote solicitor general of the Georgia circuit, which office he filled with brilliant credit.

Judge Hulsey was known as Atlanta's boy mayor. In 1868 when he was scarcely 30 he was chosen by an overwhelming majority as head of the city's government. His administration was characterized by exceptional enterprise and ability. He was indeed one of the forerunners of Greater Atlanta, and to his watchfulness and breadth of purpose in these early years the city's present fame is largely due.

As a criminal lawyer Judge Hulsey ranked among the most eloquent and successful of the section has produced.

Stronghold

BECAUSE OF ITS AMPLE RESOURCES and the careful, prudent management under which all of its affairs are conducted, the Atlanta National Bank is truly a financial stronghold.

All funds of this bank are invested in interest-bearing securities of the first class, and all prospective new loans are carefully investigated by its board of directors, composed of experienced Atlanta business men of high financial standing.

The management employs a clerical force that is in every way equal to the demands of a most discriminating patronage.

CITY HALL CLOSES.

Out of respect to the memory of Judge

William H. Hulsey all of the offices in the city hall will be closed at 3 o'clock Tuesday afternoon and remain closed for the day. The following proclamation was issued Tuesday morning by Mayor Maddox:

May 18th, 1908.

Hon. William H. Hulsey, a former mayor of Atlanta, responded to the call of death Monday afternoon. His funeral will be held Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

Colonel Hulsey was a distinguished Confederate soldier, a member of the legislature from this county, ordinary of this county, and mayor of Atlanta during one of the darkest periods of reconstruction. He served his people with credit in all these public offices.

In respect to his memory, and that those who desire, may have the opportunity to attend his funeral, it is ordered that the offices of the city hall be closed today, Tuesday, May 18th, at 3 p. m., and they will remain closed the remainder of the day.

CITY'S BOOKKEEPING SYSTEM SCORED BY ACCOUNTANT IN HIS REPORT TO COMMITTEE

General Ledger, Kept in Comptroller's Office, is Well Bound But Has No Other Resemblance to a General Ledger. Here is the Complete Report on Which Committee Bases its Conclusions.

The report is printed below of A. R. Hulse, expert accountant, who was employed to inspect the city's bookkeeping by the subcommittee charged that, owing to the antiquated system of bookkeeping, the city was losing $24,000 a year. The report says: "In short, the bookkeeping system in use is nothing more than a series of cash receipts and cash payments, the books constituting a series of cash books. We do not know what to compare it with, except a cash book for a small business. That is exactly what it is, and it is undertaking to do what a cash book cannot do."

The report is a preamble to a series of recommendations that it could be improved. It is a summary of the findings of the committee, which was organized to investigate the city's bookkeeping system. The committee found that the system was antiquated and inefficient, and that it was costing the city a large sum of money. The report recommends that the system be reorganized and that the books be kept in a more modern and efficient manner.

Buying, Selling & Appraising Fine Civil War Memorabilia

1. Confederate Officer's Frock Coat of Lt. Colonel William Hulsey This coat was observed on Feb. 27, 2006 at Atlanta History Center. The coat is regulation with exception of collar and cuff facings. Instead of colored facings, the coat had a blue cord trim around collar and vertically along edge where button holes are aligned. Coat is double breasted with Lt. Colonel stars on collars. The collar stars are embroidered and appear original to manufacture of coat as do buttons which are Civil War era U.S. general staffs (backmarked "Extra Quality"). The coat is typical in construction and material to other observed middle to late war Confederate frocks. Overall coat is in average condition for similar coats. Coat exhibits good gray/blue collar with scattered mothing especially at skirts. Interior lining has separations and many small tears. This coat needs proper preservation and conservation to maintain its aesthetics. There is accompanying this frock coat several documents still at the McRae home pertaining to Lt. Coln. William Hulsey; the most important being Confederate appointment signed by Secretary of War Seddon and his State of Georgia commission signed by Governor Joseph Brown. (I have only viewed faxed copies of documents) This coat along with supporting documents will sell in the Civil War trade for $50,000. Fair market value determination would be higher.....$50,000
2. Georgian Era Officer's Gorget & George III signed Land Grant Framed in shadow box is average condition circa 1790 "GR" over crown gilted gorget, these typically are available in the trade for about $600-800. Below the gorget is a Sept. 6, 1774 George III signed land grant for land in Georgia, this is a scarce document, but it is in poor condition with many cracks and tears, average George III signatures are cataloged for $300-500. This group would sell in the trade for.....$1000
3. Land Grant To Thomas Williams secretariially signed for Abraham Lincoln Dec. 20, 1861, framed.....$100
4. Frame of Three Republic of Texas Bank notes Notes consist of $10 Government of Texas(H-17), 1838 signed secretariially Saml. Houston; $20 Republic of Texas(A-6) and $50 Republic of Texas (A-7). The notes would grade fine condition except that all three have glue stains to each corner where they are mounted on board. The $10 and $20 are also both cut-cancelled. Average fine notes with no problems sell for about $300 each. This frame as is should still sell for$600
5. Civil War U.S. Infantry Cartridge Box This is the standard wartime issue box, complete with lead filled boxplate and tins, box is missing both roller buckles, average condition overall$400

William Henry Hulsey (October 1, 1838 – May 17, 1909) was an American attorney, soldier, and politician who served as the 18th Mayor of Atlanta, Georgia. He was an officer in the Confederate States Army during the American Civil War.

Hulsey was born in DeKalb County, Georgia, and passed the Georgia bar in 1859, but didn't practice much until after the Civil War.

With Georgia's secession, Hulsey enlisted in April 1861 as a private in the "State Guards," which soon became Company F of the 6th Georgia Infantry. That unit saw no action before Hulsey left them in early 1862, when he returned home and was elected major of the newly raised 42nd Georgia Infantry on March 20. He subsequently fought in Tazewell, Tennessee, Cumberland Gap, the Kentucky Campaign, and the Vicksburg Campaign, where he and his regiment, attached at the time to Brig. Gen. Seth Barton's brigade, were surrendered by General John C. Pemberton.

After his exchange, Major Hulsey resumed active field duty. He commanded the 42nd Georgia during the Battle of Missionary Ridge. Back in Georgia during the Atlanta Campaign, he fought from Dalton to Resaca in May 1864, where he was injured. After his recovery, he fought in the Battle of Atlanta in July and was promoted to lieutenant colonel, the rank he held for the rest of the Civil War.

He was a Democrat and served one term as Mayor of Atlanta, during which time he founded the Atlanta Public School System. He served two terms in the Georgia General Assembly from Fulton County. He was buried at Oakland Cemetery.

It fought at Chickasaw Bayou and Champion's Hill, and on July 4, 1863, was captured at Vicksburg. Exchanged and brigaded under General Stovall, the 42nd continued the fight in various battles from Missionary Ridge to Bentonville. In December, 1863, it contained 444 men and 394 arms, and in November, 1864, there were 345 present for duty. The regiment surrendered with the Army of Tennessee with 5 officers and 126 men.
