Chaille Jamison, M. D. Since graduating from Tulane in medicine in 1912, Dr. Chaill Jamison has had a service record of exceptional importance in his profession, part o the time as a medical officer in the World war, and also with a busy round of duties as a physician and surgeon in private and institutional practice. His name recalls the memory of one of New Orleans' greatest and most beloved teachers and physicians, the eminent Doctor Chaille, his maternal grandfather.

Doctor Stanford E. Chaille, who died in New Orleans in 1911 at the age of eighty-one was for twenty-three years dean of the school of medicine of Tulane. In memory of h long and useful career, his professional colleagues created the Chaille Memorial Lab of hygiene, now one of the most valuable assets of the medical school. In a characte of Doctor Chaille personally and professionally, Dr. Rudolph Matas recently said in address before the Tulane Alumnae: "We recollect an alert, energetic, active soldie personality, with slightly bowed head, covered usually with a soft broad brimmed hat inseparable relic of the style that recalled his attachment to the Lost Cause Of the Confederacy.

"A quick greeting, with half-controlled smile, endeavoring to hide itself in a brusq was at all times a marked mannerism of the man. Dogmatic in teaching fundamental pri but broadly philosophic in his interpretation of humankind, such was Chaille. His wo touched the basic forces which have made state medicine, medical education and preve medicine."

"After his retirement, no one could have watched more tenderly or with more concern waxing innovations of a new regime. His last stand came at the dedication of the ho of the Orleans Parish Medical Society, when the 'old war horse,' as he was so loving called, showed his mettle in an aggressive appeal to the younger generation to take their rights in state medicine and to further the precepts that he and his contempor had established before the Legislature of 1878."

Doctor Chaille Jamison, grandson of this distinguished man of medicine, was born at New Orleans in 1889. His great-grandfather Jamison was a Scotchman and a Presbyteri minister, coming from Belfast to New York, where he was in the ministry. Samuel Jam grandfather of Doctor Jamison, moved from New York to New Orleans in the early part nineteenth century. He was a builder and contractor and perfected an organization t constructed the beginnings of the modern city of New Orleans as distinguished from t ancient buildings of the old French regime. Samuel Jamison had a brother, David Jam who for many years was one of the prominent merchants of the city, being a member of firm Levois & Jamison, occupying the building that in later years has been occupied the Stevens Company. Thus in more ways than one, the Jamisons have been among the builders of the modern city.

Through his mother, Dr. Chaille Jamison is also a descendant of Col. John Monford, a United States army officer, who in the early years of the last century was sent to Louisiana as commandant of Fort Pike and other military posts in the South and South

Chaille Jamison was educated in the University School at New Orleans, the Virginia Military Institute at Lexington at Tulane University and was graduated Doctor of Medicine from the Tulane University School of Medicine in 1912. From 1910-12 he was an interne at the Charity Hospital, New Orleans, beginning his private practice in the same year. In 1910 appointed student demonstrator of Anatomy at Tulane and in 1912 became teacher and instructor in the laboratories of Clinical Medicine and instructor in Physical Diagnosis. In 1919 became assistant Professor of Medicine at Tulane in April, 1917, he volunteered in the medical corps of the United States Army, received training at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, was commissioned a first lieutenant and going overseas was promoted to captain and later to major. In France he was on duty at a hospital No. 24 at Limoges and spent four months with the Fourth Army Corps on the Argonne and St. Mihiel battle fronts, a portion of this time being in command of a "shock team" of the medical corps. Since the war, Doctor Jamison has continued in the military organization and is now lieutenant colonel in the Medical Reserve Officers

His high standing in his profession is indicated by some of his active associations. He is senior physician at the Charity Hospital, senior physician at the Mercy Hospital, physician to the Hotel Dieu, is assistant bacteriologist of the City Board of Health is former president of the Orleans Parish Medical Society. He also belongs to the Louisiana State Medical Society and the American Medical Association.

Doctor Jamison's life is given to teaching at the Medical School of Tulane University and the practice of internal medicine.

Chaille, Stanford Emerson, A. M., M. D., one of the most eminent physicians in the South and for more than 40 years a member of the medical faculty of Tulane university, was born at Natchez Miss., July 9, 1890, a son of William H. and Mary Stanford Chaille. His paternal ancestry dates back to Moise or Pierre Chaille, a Huguenot refugee from La Rochelle, France, after the revocation of the edict of Nantes in 1685. The descendants of this Pierre Chaille lived along the eastern shore of Maryland, several of them, among whom was Peter Chaille, the great-grandfather of Dr. Chaille, were prominent patriots of the Revolutionary war. Dr. Chaille's mother was a daughter of Clement and Anna (Dashiehl) Stanford, and a niece of Hon. Richard Stanford, who was a member of Congress from North Carolina from 1797 to 1815. Dr. Chaille's early education was acquired under the direction of private tutors. In 1847 he graduated at Phillips' academy, South Andover, Mass., then entered Harvard college and received the degree of bachelor of arts from that institution in 1851. His medical education was acquired in the medical department of the University of Louisiana (now Tulane), where he was graduated with the degree of doctor of medicine in 1853, and the following year he received the degree of master of arts from Harvard. Subsequently he spent 3 years in Paris and other European cities in various lines of medical research. From 1851 to 1853 he was resident in the New Orleans Charity hospital and after graduating in medicine he was for about a year the resident physician in the United States marine hospital. For the next 6 years he was resident physician of the Circus (Rampart) street hospital, and in 1862 he became acting surgeon-general of Louisiana. The same year he entered the Confederate army as a surgeon and served until the close of the war, having been medical inspector of the Army of the Tennessee in 1862-63, surgeon in charge of a hospital at Atlanta, Ga., in 1863-64, and the surgeon in charge of a hospital at Macon, Ga., until the end of his army service. In 1857 he became coeditor and proprietor of the New Orleans Medical and Surgical Journal and remained in that capacity until 1868. From 1858 to 1867, except for the time he was in the army, he was demonstrator of anatomy in the medical department of the University of Louisiana. In 1867 he was appointed to the chair of physiology and pathological anatomy, which position he filled with signal ability until his retirement in the spring of 1868. In 1876 he was appointed professor of obstetrics, which position he declined, and from March 31, 1885, to the time of his retirement he was dean of the medical faculty of the university. Dr. Chaille was a member of the American Public Health association; the American Medical association; the Louisiana State Medical society, in which he served on the committee on state medicine; and the Orleans Parish Medical society. He was an honorary member of the International Medical congress held at Philadelphia, Pa., in 1876, and delivered one of the ten addresses on medical jurisprudence before that body. He was an associate fellow of the College of Physicians of Philadelphia; was appointed by Congress one of the experts to investigate the yellow fever epidemic of 1878; the following year was sent by the United States national board of health to Havana as president of the yellow

MARQUISE DE FONTENAY.

(Copyright, 1911, by the Brentwood Company.)

Dread of an occupation by one or more of the foreign powers is causing the leading chieftains, statesmen and provincial governors of Abyssinia to avoid any fighting among themselves in connection with the somewhat chaotic situation which prevails just at present at Addis Ababa in connection with the throne. Contrary to general belief, Emperor Menelek is still alive. But he has been for nearly two years past not only completely paralyzed physically, but also mentally. In fact, he has neither the will nor the means of making his wishes known. Before he was overtaken by this illness he appointed one of his most trusted generals, Ras Tassama, the governor of the Province of Gore, to be regent pending the minority of his grandson, the Crown Prince Jyassu, which is the Abyssinian for "Jesus."

The regent has now died, and since it is only the emperor himself who has the power to appoint a regent, and the emperor is incapable of doing anything of the kind, the question arises as to what is the right thing to do. There are some who advocate the immediate coronation of the crown prince and his proclamation as negus, thus bestowing upon him the power to appoint regents to administer the government of the Ethiopian empire during his minority. But there is a strong religious prejudice against elevating him to the throne, and especially against consecrating him as sovereign as long as Menelek remains in the land of the living.

The leading man in the Abyssinian capital since the death of the regent seems to be Ras Abate, brother-in-law of the late regent, and at his suggestion a council of five of the leading statesmen and generals of Abyssinia is being formed, presided over by the Abuna or Archbishop Matthias, which is to take charge of the Government of Abyssinia until the crown prince is in a position to assume the reins himself, either as regent or as emperor.

Champions of the equal rights for women movement may be interested to learn that in the seventeenth century a very remarkable woman, the widowed countess of Thurn and Taxis, for upwards of twenty years filled the office of postmaster general for almost the whole of Continental Europe. It was an office calling for the greatest amount of administrative ability and energy. For in those troubled times, when there were no railroads or steamships, when highways were infested with robber barons and bandits of high and low degree, and when war, rather than peace, constituted the normal state of affairs, the conveyance of mails was attended by much difficulty and danger, calling for both naval and military protection.

postmistress general of his peninsula kingdom.

She administered the office to the satisfaction and to the admiration of everybody, and when her son, after attaining his majority, took over from her the duties of postmaster general for all those various countries he found everything in apple-pie order. It was his son who was raised to the dignity, first of all, of prince of the Netherlands, and then to that of prince of the Holy Roman Empire.

Twelve years ago the present chief of the family, Albert of Thurn and Taxis, whose mother was the eldest sister of the late empress of Austria, was created duke of Worth and of Donaustaufeu by the regent of Havaria. He is married to Archduchess Marguerite of Austria, to whom he presented, on the occasion of his wedding, a rather unique gift, namely, the most luxuriously equipped private railroad train in Europe.

A superb Flemish tapestry, dating from 1650, and adorning the walls of the palace at Ratisbonne, represents the Countess Alexandrine of Thurn and Taxis on horseback in her robes of postmistress general of the empire.

When in 1840 Admiral the prince de Join-ville, the sailor son of King Louis Philippe, conveyed back from the island of St. Helena to France the remains of Emperor Napoleon, to rest in the Palace of the Invalides, on the banks of the Seine, he brought along with him the big tombstones of the island grave in which the body of the emperor had lain for close upon two decades. They were three in number, and immediately after Napoleon's death had been taken from the floor of the kitchens of Longwood in order to serve for the purpose, no other stones being just then available.

Amidst all the pomp and pageants that marked the arrival of the body of Napoleon from St. Helena at Cherbourg the tombstones were forgotten at Cherbourg and remained in the dockyard there, under a shed, until a few months ago, only partially sheltered from damage due to weather and carelessness. Indeed, as the present generation of government employees at the arsenal at Cherbourg and the generation that preceded it knew nothing about the stones, it is a wonder that they

Preserving the medical heritage of New Orleans and Louisiana is a special mission of the Tulane Manuscripts Department. The Tulane Manuscripts Department contains more than thirty collections relating to medicine, including the papers of physicians and the records of hospitals and professional medical societies. Researchers should also be aware of our extensive holdings documenting social welfare efforts in New Orleans.

- General Stanhope Bayne-Jones, M.D., Manuscripts Collection 855, Bayne-Jones, General Stanhope, 1888-1970, Papers, 1911-1991, two linear feet (five manuscripts boxes). Bayne-Jones was a bacteriologist, a pioneer in the field of public health, and a medical administrator for the U.S. military. The Bayne-Jones papers have three broad sections:
  1. Yale College and family correspondence
  2. professional papers concerning his medical career and research
  3. military papers.
- Stanford Emerson Chaille, M.D., Louisiana physician and Dean of the Tulane Medical School, 62 items, including 1 volume (1847-1911). Manuscripts by or about Chaille are preserved throughout the collections, including in the Medical Papers Series, 589(13), the Kuntz Collection (600), the LHA Collection (55-C), and others. Most notable perhaps are the Chaille-Jamison Family Papers (302), the Joseph Jones Papers (172), and the Rudolph Matas Papers (868). The Tulane University Archives also preserves some information about Chaille.
- Patrick H. Hanley, M.D., Papers, Manuscripts Collection 887, Hanley, Patrick H., 1909-1994, Papers 1923 [1943-1979]-1994, 8 linear feet. Professional papers, correspondence, military records, the State troops, then organized, were transferred to the Confederate States, they were recommissioned by the Secretary of War of the Confederacy, on recommendation of the surgeon-general, after examination and approval by the army medical examining boards of the Confederate army. As other troops were subsequently organized, they were supplied with medical officers who had passed a satisfactory examination before a Confederate army medical examining board and commissioned in like manner; the same measure was followed in the hospital service.

The examinations before State and Confederate army boards were thorough, complete, and eminently practical. Each applicant was required in a given number of hours to fill out the answers to a number of written questions, under supervision of the secretary of the board; and this being done, he was invited into an adjoining room and submitted to an oral examination to the satisfaction of the assembled board. The Confederate board of examiners serving with the Department and Army of Tennessee, as I remember, consisted of Dr. D. W. Yandell, of Louisville; Dr. J. F. Heustis, of Mobile, and Dr. Stanford E. Chaille, of New Orleans, all being well-known teachers of medicine and surgery in their respective States, and at that time, or subsequently, of national reputation. Other medical examining boards were of like character.

The late Doctor Chaille, the dean of the medical department of Tulane University, in a private letter, speaks of the work of the examining boards appointed in 1862 to report on the competency of the medical staff. The Confederate soldiers were almost exclusively volunteers who had elected their medical as well as other officers. Doctor Chaille reported that his board caused the dismissal of a number of the surgeons and assistant surgeons, sometimes incurring the hostility of the officers and men in consequence, "because of the gross incompetence of laymen then as well as now to judge of the incompetence of medical men." He goes on to say that the incompetent were "exceptions to the superior merit of the vast majority of the members of the Confederate medical staff." This statement goes far to explain any apparent contradictions in the testimony regarding the competence of Confederate surgeons, and must be generally accepted.

Here is a copy of the e-mail sent to me regarding our request for a copy of the Chaille-Jamison family papers. It looks as if you may want to personally take a look at these documents, unless you want me to use my judgement in determining what papers would be most suitable for your purposes.

Just let me know (either way, you know this is going to cost you)!

Thank you for your note and I apologize for taking so long to respond. We have between 300 and 350 items relating to the Chaille Jamison family. The Chaille Jamison family papers specifically have 184 items. I'd recommend that you drop by our department when you have the time, review what we have, and see if any of it might be useful to your friend.

About photocopying, all photocopying damages documents. Since the materials we preserve are almost all unique (literally—they exist here and nowhere else in the world), we try to discourage photocopying in favor of taking notes. Of course, if you find just a few papers that you would like copies of (four or five pages), we wouldn't make an issue of it, but if you think your friend might want twenty or thirty copies, then we might need to consider alternatives, such as photographs instead of photocopies. Of course, the fragility of the individual documents would determine whether they could be copied as well.

Please feel free to call me at 865-5685 if you have any questions. Thank you again for your note and don't hesitate to contact me if I can do anything for you.
