First introduced in 1931, the Winchester Model 21 shotgun possesses a lengthy tradition of excellence. Its production was a direct result of the Winchester Company's determination to make the finest double barreled gun possible by the application of modern metallurgical and engineering methods. The chromium molybdenum barrels were joined by a partial dematril process and heat-treated for ultimate strength . . . a major innovation at that time eliminating the then-common practice of brazing double barrels. Only one grade was produced with differences in decorative work and wood affecting price . . . also contrary to the common practices of the time. Today the Model 21 remains one of the world's finest custom-made shotguns.
