The Governor General's Body Guard

For the Indian regiment of the same name, see Governor General's Bodyguard.

The Governor General's Body Guard was a Canadian Army, militia, Household Cavalry regiment.

[\[edit\]](#) History

The regiment dates as far back as 1822 in York, Upper Canada (now Toronto). For the remainder of the 19th century this troop was recognized as the cavalry of the city of Toronto. It has link to the 1st York Light Dragoons formed in 1810 by Captain (later Major) John Button or Button's Troop (commanded until 1831). Also known as 'Denison's Troop', it began as the York Dragoons under the command of Captain George Taylor Denison I. Under the Militia Act of 1793, service in the militia was mandatory for all healthy male citizens aged 16 to 60 years. Like most militia in Canada during this period, the Dragoons were raised and financed by wealthy gentry, in this case the Denison family, as volunteers were not part of a regular army. The Dragoons began as a local mounted infantry company linked to the parent West York Regiment of Militia. This peculiar organization was a practice that started during the American Revolution with the Loyalist militia regiment the "Queen's York Rangers". Light cavalry was needed to provide dispatch duty, scouting, flank protection and picketing for the infantry battalion. Full militia cavalry regiments were too expensive to operate and large scale cavalry operations were of little use in the dense forests of eastern North America. The cavalry troop was sufficient to serve the purpose and militia infantry were allowed to raise cavalry troops under the Militia Act of 1808. This unit, like many local military units, was made up of volunteers and formed to supplement the presence of British Army units in Upper Canada. The company or troop broke from the parent infantry battalion and became an independent troop of cavalry in 1839.

The troop was one of only two fully uniformed militia units to rally to the flag with the threat of unrest and rebellion within the colony, in 1837. The troop was given new uniforms, fully armed and redesignated the "Queens Light Dragoons" (QLD). Operating along side the local Markham Troop, forming a squadron, the QLD participated in a number of actions during the rebellion to include Gallows Hill, Navy Island and Town of Scotland. The Toronto troop was on active service for several months during this crisis.

In 1866, the troop was the only cavalry in Upper Canada to be placed on active duty, engaged and employed against the Fenian Irish Republican Army invasion from the United States. The troop lead Col Peacock's Column to meet the Fenian force along the Niagara Peninsula as scouts. The troop was the first unit to enter and relieve the town of Fort Erie - capturing several Fenians before they escaped across the Niagara River. The Fenian force was defeated and many of its members arrested by Canadian and American authorities.

By the mid-19th Century, Britain began to pull its army out of Canada for the Crimea War and the need to establish a Canadian army became clear. With the enactment of the Militia Act of 1855, the Canadian Militia Department was established. Under the act, the Canadian Militia unit establishment was drafted by the new department. Local militia units for the first time were recognized as standing units to become a more critical part of the defence of Canada. In 1847 the unit was gazetted and became known as the 1st Toronto Independent Troop of Cavalry. It was renamed again in 1855 as the 1st Troop of Volunteer Militia Cavalry of the County of York and placed on the Militia list 27 Sept 1855. In 1866 it was renamed 1st York Troop The Governor General's Body Guard for Upper Canada and in 1867 became The Governor General's Body Guard for Ontario. After British forces completely left Canada in 1870 the Canadian Government raised a small regular force and began to look at reorganizing the Militia cavalry into full regiments. Most of the independent troops across the country were amalgamated into numbered regiments of dragoons or hussars during the 1870s. The GGBG was the only non-numbered corps and was expanded to squadron strength in 1876. With a final rationalization of the Canadian Cavalry Corps in 1889, The GGBG was brought to full regimental strength with the amalgamation of the local Markham and Oak Ridges Troops. The name was changed a final time in 1895 to The Governor General's Body Guard of Canada.

The GGBG was mobilized as a full squadron and participated in the Northwest Rebellion in 1885 as rear area security for General Middleton's force. The squadron's task was to protect the main supply route for the force in place with routine patrols from the rail line to Batoche and to secure the only supply depot and telegraph station at Humboldt. A fort was built, consisting of an earthen berm, around the telegraph station and named "Fort Denison". Middleton's force defeated the Metis at Batoche.

The GGBG, as a regiment, supplied some 50 men as augmenties to the small Canadian Regular Army for service in South Africa in 1900. LT HZ Cockburn earned the Victoria Cross while serving as a volunteer with the Royal Canadian Dragoons during this conflict. The GGBG, like all of the militia during the first world war, was not activated for duty, but rather assisted in raising numbered battalions for the Canadian Expeditionary Force and recruiting to fill the CEF ranks. Thousands of Toronto's citizens were recruited through the GGBG for service in the trenches. The GGBG supplied soldiers for the 3rd Bn, 2nd Bn, 4th CMR, 216th Bn, 124th Bn to name a few.

In 1936 the regiment was amalgamated with The Mississauga Horse to become The Governor General's Horse Guards.

Carbine #34761 (in Order #20872) is marked NWP in factory records and Carbine #34763 (in NWMP Order #19819) is not marked NWP. This is obvious mistake of putting ditto in wrong remark column. Carbine #35874 (also in Order #20832) has been located and found to be a standard carbine, which confirms Order #20832 not to be a N.W.M.P. order.

In Order #19819 five carbines (33434, 33436, 33438, 33439 & 33440) are listed as Carbine 45-60. They are not marked "APR 8 Car. 45-75 NWP" like all the other carbines on that page in Order #19819.

In Order #5366 five carbines (34434, 34436, 34438, 34439, & 34440) just 1000 numbers off and already 45-75 carbines are marked "Apr 8 Car 45-75 NWP". It appears with the same handwriting and date these entries were made on ledger page #34401, rather than #33401.

Carbine #33483 and #35825 are listed as 45-60 carbine with no shipping date and no work order number. Both of these carbines are listed in N.W.M.P. Records as Mounted Police Carbines.

Carbine #34483 in Order #5366 shipped 7/17/83 and Rife #34825 in Order #11101 shipped 3/4/84 are both marked with same "Apr 8 Car 45-75 NWP" indicating changed to Carbine 45-75 and shipped in order #19819 on 4/8/85.

Guns shipped from factory, with no mention of return in factory records, could not have been changed and shipped 1 to 2 years later. Seems these erroneous entries, along with the 5 carbine entries above were made at the same time by the same employee.

Only 152 carbines were marked NWP in the factory records and these entries were only made on two dates, April 8 and April 9. These entries were all made in the same handwriting. It is very evident that all April 8th entries were meant for order #19819 shipped on April 8, 1885 and all April 9 entries were meant for order #20057 shipped on April 9, 1885.
